Director's Notes

At times, I am amazed how my varied interests, educational background, and creativity come together in my day-to-day work and career. In a recent visit to the library where I first became a director, I remembered how and when this happens. I also was reminded that my work is not really about me, it is about the library, its resources, and you.

The Alexandrian Public Library (APL) in Mt. Vernon, Indiana recently completed an impressive renovation. It is a well-designed building, and the APL staff, board, and architects did an outstanding job of improving and expanding it. With creative flair, they added color, redesigned the entrance way, and enhanced their children's programming space. All involved should be commended for envisioning and producing something new and exciting for their community.

As a current APL board member and I toured the public and staff areas, I really studied the details of various spaces. I tried to remember each space as it existed when I worked there, but sometimes that was a formidable task. I just could not bring to mind how some spaces were before. I attribute that to how much the spaces had changed, but it might be due to my occasionally failing memory.

It was our "behind the scenes" APL tour that reminded me how library work combines my interests, education, and creativity. One good example is my theatre experience. In performances, we mostly see the on-stage production the director wants us to experience. We learn very little about what goes on "behind-the-scenes." We see the actors in costume, lighting effects, and set designs, plus we hear the performance. We may (or may not) know how things occurred prior to the production, but people and resources came together to make it all happen. In a successful production, our focus is entirely on the performance.

How does this apply to your library? We are now in the process of finalizing a TCPL production: the completion of your new branch library. Varied interests, educations, skills, and creativity came together in pre-production. We worked to develop the building design and its components, incorporate library services and programs, and add a creative flair. Like the successful APL production, there are many people behind the scenes at TCPL making this happen.

As we eagerly anticipate our opening, the professional architects, construction trades and engineers are finishing their work on the building. All the while, a great team of TCPL staff members have been working "behind-the-scenes." I want to give credit to them for their outstanding work right now. These talented people combined their interests, education, and experience to brainstorm, develop, and execute key ideas you will see in the new branch. If I try to name everyone I am sure to overlook someone. So THANKS to you all! Staff who planned, organized, and accomplished the ground breaking. Staff who spearheaded and marketed fundraising. Staff who deliberated and advised on transitional aspects of the new branch relating to technologies, furniture, collections, movers, and operational hours.

These staff members are the "behind -the-scenes" people who accomplished all you will see and experience at your new Wyandotte Branch Library. We are all proud of the board's vision. Hope to see everyone when the curtain opens in July!
