Director's Notes

It is official! The Wyandotte Branch of the Tippecanoe County Public Library is open. Business is consistent and brisk. With singing, drumming, cold treats, and lots of people, the grand opening event was a celebration indeed.

Some will ask, "Does a neighborhood library really make that much of a difference?" Absolutely! The Klondike Branch, very much its own success story, confirms what a branch library does for a neighborhood. In 2015, Klondike served more than 80,000 visitors. People checked out over 200,000 items and enjoyed more than 120 programs. Regular library users fondly consider this branch their library. Moreover, the building itself is a highly visible presence for residents and passersby.

Early indicators point to Wyandotte enjoying the same success, visibility, and local ownership. Architecturally, the building is very similar to Klondike. There are minor differences in the facades, but both feature a single service desk, fireplace, public meeting room, and teen area. Still, there are a couple of key services at Wyandotte that are not yet available at Klondike.

The first is a digital arts suite. It was generously funded through the Olson Community Endowment Fund and the Community Foundation of Greater Lafayette. The technologies, equipment, and software at work in this suite help you create your own content, then digitize and distribute it in a choice of formats. You also can preserve and convert VHS home movies and 16 mm film to digital. Exploration of this excellent resource can spark your imagination, creativity, and innovation. Your results also may look and sound more professional. The suite itself is self-contained and available to anyone with a TCPL card and a reservation.

The second service is a greatly enhanced independent check-out experience. TCPL self-check stations are not new, but the self-check at Wyandotte is our first to employ radio frequency identification tags (RFID). RFID tracks each item in the collection. It interacts with a networked reader and automatically checks items out to your library card. When you return materials, RFID automatically checks them back in. This resource is accurate, efficient, and allows staff to spend more time with customers.

One of the best reasons to build a neighborhood branch is to provide easy access for neighborhood youth. Many youth wish they could drive themselves wherever they want to go. Wishful thinking at best! If your children are responsible and independent, they now may walk, bike, or skate to the Wyandotte Branch. In addition to offering youth their own programs and materials, a visible neighborhood branch encourages youth to browse and read on their own. In the process, we hope they soon realize how important the library is to their community.

The new Wyandotte Branch will make a difference by impacting youth and adults in multiple neighborhoods in eastern Tippecanoe County. For generations to come, it will serve as a resource that will enrich individual lives and the community's life. We are extremely proud to make that difference!
