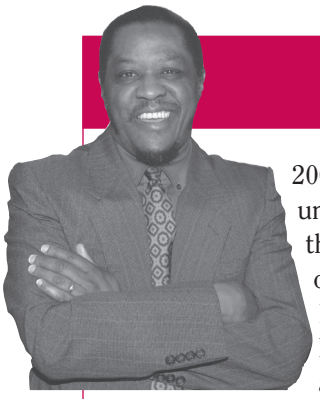
My Caldecott Experience



2007 was undoubtedly one of the busiest years of my professional life. Many of you know I spent quite a bit of energy on the Klondike Branch, but others may not know that behind the scenes, I had an enormous professional responsibility. The blessing of having a voice in choosing the best-illustrated American children's book published in 2007 was given to me when I was appointed to the 2008 Caldecott selection committee. Sponsored by the Association of Library Service to Children (ALSC), a division of the American Library Association (ALA), the Randolph J. Caldecott Medal is awarded annually to the artist of the most distinguished American picture book for children published in English in the United States during the preceding year. I want to let you in on my Caldecott experience.

In the fall of 2006, I was appointed to the committee and was one of 15 people serving on the committee. It was a great group of children's book lovers from all across the United States and one representative from Canada. Over the next 13 months at semi-annual conferences held in Seattle, Washington D.C, and Philadelphia we enjoyed three face-to-face meetings. Between meetings, e-mail was our primary communication method. For 12 months more than 700 picture books were mailed to my home. I read, evaluated and compared how the illustrations supported the author's words. ALSC distributed a detailed manual as the primary resource and guide for our assignment. The elected chair, also a noted children's book reviewer, facilitated the work of the committee.

We did more than just receive and read the books. Occasionally we had to do some research, to find book reviews and background information on illustrators. Each month we each submitted titles of books we considered noteworthy. The chairperson compiled the recommended titles, and members were encouraged to take a second, closer look at each book. In October to December, each committee member nominated, with written annotations, up to four titles for the Caldecott award.

Our final conference was in Philadelphia. Prior to the final deliberations, our committee enjoyed a traditional Thursday evening dinner together. We then met twice on Friday, twice on Saturday, and once on Sunday morning. We presented information about the nominated books, pointed out the strengths and weaknesses of the illustrations, deliberated about how well the artists interpreted the texts, and eliminated book after book. Finally, with the pool reduced in number to only those books we believed should win the award, each member voted for a first, second, and third choice.

Ultimately, the committee had to select just one book. The winner had to have at least 8 first place votes and a precise point margin between it and the next book. When we finally had a winner and knew we had accomplished our assigned task, it was really exhilarating.

A 6:45 a.m. on Monday, January 14, 2008, phone calls to the Caldecott award-winning illustrator and honor illustrators began. For most of the world, it was just another Monday. For the single Caldecott award-winner, the four honor recipients, and our committee it was a day we will always remember.

All in all, it was a wonderful experience -- in more ways than I ever expected. Seeing every new American illustrated children's book published in just one year is a monumental task. Even for those of us who work daily in a library, it is a rare opportunity. Receiving boxes of new books at your home for an entire year is like having a birthday every day. As an ex-children's librarian, my confidence in the committee process was reaffirmed as the process produced one of the most unusual Caldecott winners of all time. I was extremely proud to be associated with this Caldecott committee and to have served my profession in this privileged way.
