Once Upon a Time in Africa
Storyteller Deborah Asante
Thursday, July 14, Downtown
10:30 a.m. & 2:00 p.m.

Deborah Asante, award-winning storyteller, actress, writer, and director, is the founder and director of the Asante Children's Theatre in Indianapolis. Her gift of telling tall tales was enhanced when she met Griots (African Oral Historians) in Ghana, West Africa. She was captivated by their word-of-mouth methods of recording history. Asante presents original and traditional folktales from African cultures. Tickets available Tuesday, July 11.

Director's Notes, Mobile Library & More

By Jos Holman
County Librarian

Recently, after making a 25-minute presentation to a local civic club, I mentioned that it was the first time I spoke to a local group in a good year or more. Someone quickly retorted, "Then you have been around long enough 'that everyone has heard you'." These may not be their exact words, but they do fully represent the intended meaning of my nine-year residence in Lafayette. I am not accustomed to being around a long time. Yet, the writing of this column proves we have been connected nearly a decade.

50 columns and counting! Without hesitation and because of the file-naming method I use on my computer, I can safely say this is the 50th column I have written as County Librarian. Starting work here in 2002, there is no way I would have imagined writing a 50th column. First, I never would have thought I had that much to say. Okay, those of you who really know me understand I have an affinity for talking, but talking doesn't translate into consistently trying to get across a message that will interest a variety of people. In fact, I always question whether the column I write will be interesting at all. Second, I just never would have imagined spending enough time in one place to write fifty columns. But this is where I am!

My two guiding forces when I write this column have been: 1.) I always write about a topic that is significant to me; and, 2.) I always write from my heart and mind. These two forces assure that the column is a genuine reflection of me. Over the years I found I do enjoy sharing my thoughts and ideas with you, the news from four TCPL libraries, and news from regional and state library associations. In some ways, this column provides a platform for both my administrative choices and my thoughts about librarianship.

As I reflect on the actual writing of this 50th "Director's Notes", I sincerely hope what appears in this column is of interest to you, and that it gives you some real insight into your library system. I hope after reading it, you have a better understanding of what we are trying to do as your library and in service to 130,000 people throughout our county.

I hope you understand where we are in progress on special projects, how we decide to make changes in library services, our awareness of your changing needs, and what we believe your needs propel us to do. I hope you gain a real sense of the varied administrative stances required to carry out library operations successfully. I hope this column makes a real difference in how you see and use your Tippecanoe County Public Library.

Ultimately, this column is my way of providing additional service to you as a library user. As I share the things that are on my mind, I realize it is a real privilege to know thoughtful people are reading what I am writing. Please understand, I do not take that privilege for granted and realize I am fortunate to have the responsibility. I continue to be humbled by your continued interest and support of this library.

New Microfilm Reader Is Digital

The Downtown Library now offers a ScanPro 2000 microfilm reader. It provides more options than standard microfilm readers and delivers crisp laser printouts of digital images. With a single click you can save to your own CD or USB drive. You can e-mail your discoveries and post images on the Internet.

The high-resolution, 17 inch tall monitor screen displays images with clarity and makes entire pages easy to view. A zoom feature enlarges text for better viewing and reading.

Up to 256 shades of gray allow optimum contrast in images, so you can manipulate photos. A photo-cropping feature allows you to remove outer sections and improve the framing of your image. You also can highlight and change aspect ratios.

The ScanPro 2000 includes a tutorial. Trained TCPL staff members are available to demonstrate and answer questions. This new microfilm reader joins an array of microfilm equipment conveniently located near the TCPL Information Desk (reference area).

To view current histories & Journal and Courier editions, from 1858 to present, go to www.tcpl.lib.in.us/genealogy.
